The world of Maps

Painted in quaint Sixteenth Century style, this chart of the Western Hemisphere suggests the imagination that launched intrepid explorers to the ends of the earth, yet records accurately the boundaries of to-day. On it are traced the paths, plotted through virgin seas and [illegible]

Fifth of the series of five murals by N. C. Wyeth, the originals of which adorn the walls of the National Geographic Society buildings in Washington. The other four pictures have appeared as frontispieces in the National Geographic Magazine for March, May, July and November, 1928.

While simulating the illuminated mariners' charts of the Sixteenth Century, which pictorially dramatized the deeds of dauntless explorers, this map of the Eastern Hemisphere records present-day political boundaries. It also traces the routes of the great discoverers who sailed strange seas and penetrated misty continents to add new areas to the known world.

Fourth of a series of five murals by N. C. Wyeth, the originals of which adorn the walls of the National Geographic Society buildings in Washington. The fifth, a similar rectangular map of the Western Hemisphere, will appear in an early issue of the National Geographic Magazine.
